Two young women returned home to Stockholm from a four-week vacation to find that their private apartment, which they had rented out through Airbnb, had allegedly been used as a "temporary brothel."

London's The Kernel reported that the apartment owners returned to find a note in the mail from the Stockholm County Police saying that their home had been raided on August 11, and that two call girls had been caught performing sexual acts with clients. The prostitutes were reportedly already under police surveillance prior to renting the apartment.

The two young women who used Airbnb, an online rental marketplace, found pubic hair and a plastic bag of used condoms in the apartment upon returning home, according to The Kernel.

The homeowners, who spoke to The Kernel on condition of anonymity, said the renters looked "very high class, with business suits."

"We feel uneasy about being in our own apartment after this," the homeowner said.

"Since learning of this incident, we have been in close contact with the host and we continue to offer them our support," an Airbnb spokesperson told NBC News in a statement. "We immediately and permanently removed the offending guest account from Airbnb, we have been in contact with law enforcement and will help with their ongoing investigation."
